Section 4: Reading

Read the text and answer the questions.

Have you ever spilt a drink on your laptop? If yes, you'll remember the panic when you thought that your device would never work again. If you haven't, it may happen to you in the future. Spilling drinks on a laptop is a common thing. Just in case it does happen, here are some basic tips that tell you what you should do.

The effect of the drink on your laptop depends on what drink it is. Water and green tea generally cause the least damage. The worst drinks to spill are those that contain milk or sugar, such as hot drinks like coffee and tea, and soft drinks like cola or lemonade.

What happens to your laptop also depends on what you do immediately after spilling the drink. The first thing you should do is unplug the machine and take the battery out. This will, hopefully, stop any electrical damage. Then, you should turn it upside down and stop the liquid getting to the motherboard. This is where some of the most important parts of the computer are placed, and if they get wet, your laptop may be damaged permanently.

The next step is to clean up as much of the liquid as quickly as possible. If you don't have a cloth to do this, use some tissues instead. Try to touch the keyboard lightly instead of wiping it with the tissue. If you spilled a lot of liquid, you'll have to work harder to save your machine. Put it near a window or somewhere with cold air, and shake it gently to get the liquid out. It might help if you take off the bottom of the case so that you can take out the hard drive. If you do this, remember not to touch any of the electronics. When you have done as much as you can, leave the laptop somewhere warm to dry. This will take at least a day. Do not use a hairdryer as this will make the machine dirty.

When you think the laptop is dry, switch it back on to see if it works. If you only spilt a little clean water, you might be lucky and the machine may turn on straight away. However, you'll probably have problems if the drink was a large, milky coffee with lots of sugar in it, or a glass of wine. If your laptop still doesn't work, look at the keyboard and try taking it apart to clean it better. However, if you've gone this far, it's probably time you thought about getting some help. You can either take the laptop to be repaired or buy a new one. And in future, remember to drink your coffee at someone else's desk!
